Six Uplift seniors receive $20,000 scholarships from The Michael & Susan Dell Foundation
One Dell Scholar also has received a prestigious Gates Millennium Scholarship

DALLAS (May 12) – Six Uplift Education seniors have been named to the Michael & Susan Dell Foundation’s Dell Scholars Program, each receiving a $20,000 scholarship. In addition, one of the Dell Scholars, Noe Nunez, a senior at Peak Preparatory School, has received a prestigious Gates Millennium scholarship. Nunez is one of only 1,000 students nationwide who have been named Gates Millennium Scholars out of more than 23,000 who applied.

Gates Millennium Scholars receive a good-through-graduation scholarship to attend the college or university of their choice, along with academic support throughout their college careers. The goal of the Gates Millennium Scholars program is to promote academic excellence and provide an opportunity for outstanding minority students with significant financial needs to reach their highest potential.

The Dell Scholars Program has awarded $6 million in college scholarship funds to 300 students this year. Despite having only 200 seniors across the Uplift Education network, the Dallas-based charter school operator ranked as one of the highest number of Dell Scholars from a single school system. By comparison, there were only nine Dell Scholars from all the comprehensive and magnet high schools within the three public school districts where Uplift’s schools operate.

The Gates Millennium Scholars program reduces financial barriers for minorities with high academic and leadership promise, increases representation of minority groups in disciplines of education where they are severely underrepresented and provides seamless support from undergraduate to doctoral programs for those selected. The program was established in 1999 and initially funded by a $1 billion grant from the Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation.

Much more than just a check, the Dell Scholars Program targets low-income students in the academic middle and is the first of its kind to include wraparound services that help scholars and their families deal with personal problems – such as financial, legal and personal relationship issues – that might adversely affect their ability to graduate.

As the price of paying for college continues to rise, an estimated 3.2 million bachelor degrees will be lost this decade due to increased unmet costs for college ready students.

“We are so excited to help send these students to college and mentor them toward their end goal of a college degree,” said Oscar Sweeten-Lopez, of the Dell Scholars Program at the Michael & Susan Dell Foundation.

“We are so proud of the six Uplift seniors selected for this exciting recognition from national scholarship programs designed for a special kind of student,” said Uplift Education CEO Yasmin Bhatia. “Uplift Education is committed to continuing to have 100 percent of our seniors accepted to college, and we are thankful for programs like the Gates Millennium Scholars and Dell Scholars Program that support students’ remarkable determination to succeed and pursue a college degree to realize their goals.”
